The rise and fall of corporate empires, national companies going global, changing their governance in the process and creating products which purposefully elicit emotional consumer reactions as brands, all this is fascinating stuff not only for successful practitioners, but also for readers and researchers alike. All participants of the seminar on "Comparative Business Cultures" held at the Economics Department of the National University of Singapore during 2003 shared this spirit of intellectual excitement and discovery of the most diverse corporate and marketing worlds which are captured in the contributions of this volume. Hence I am most obliged to my young researcher colleagues for their interesting and lively chapters. My thanks go to Asmizar bin Abu (McDonald's), Chia Peng Theng (Nokia), Melissa Chin (Disney), Chua Sin Lay (Mars), Annalisa Dass (Nike), Pauline Javani (Zubrowka Bison Vodka), Cheryl Lim (Benetton), Lim Jia Woon (Toyota), Lim Teck Nam (Virgin), Ong Wei Ling (Ikea) and Michelle Phua Yifei (Coca-Cola).

As the author of the remaining chapters I am also deeply grateful to Jenny Tan and Zareen Tia of the Asia Europe Foundation (ASEF) for their meticulous secretarial skills when putting my scribbles into a decent typewritten draft. Last but not least my thanks go to my long suffering family for enduring yet another book project.
