This series showcases the most significant and lasting contributions to scholarship in the studies of China's politics, society, and culture — whether for general readers or specialists. Each of the volumes is a quality work by a leading scholar or scholars in the field and may take the form of a research monograph, a multi-author edited volume, a conference proceeding, a textbook, or an annual review, among others. While the focus is on China, the series does not lose sight of the interplay of other regional and global forces and their influence and impact on China.

Forthcoming Title

China under the Fourth Generation Leadership: Opportunities, Dangers, and Dilemmas, edited by Tun-jen Cheng, Jacques deLisle and Deborah Brown.

List of Contributors

Bruce Gilley is a doctoral student in politics at Princeton University. His current research is centered on the legitimacy of states in cross-national comparison, paying particular attention to the mediation of pluralism. He is the author of three books on China, most recently China's Democratic Future (Columbia University Press, 2004), and co-editor of a forthcoming volume entitled Comparing China and India: New Paradigms for Asia's Giants.

Liang Fook Lye is a Research Officer at the East Asian Institute of the National University of Singapore. He has conducted research on China's central-local relations, technocratic leadership, media reforms, and political legitimacy. He was part of a team that completed a study about the Singapore-Suzhou Industrial Park. He has also co-authored articles related to China's leadership transition, political reform, and crisis management. He compiled the index for the present book.

Robert Oppenheim is an anthropologist who teaches Korean topics in the Department of Asian Studies, University of Texas at Austin. His work focuses variously on Kyōngju and the contemporary politics of history, place-making and locality, and the history of anthropology.

Takayuki Sakamoto is an assistant professor of political science at Southern Methodist University. His research focuses on the comparative political economy of industrial democracies and Japanese politics. He is currently conducting a cross-national study of economic policy and performance in OECD countries, and also a study of the Japanese political economy and its changes over the past three decades. His articles have appeared in Comparative Political Studies, European Journal of Political Research, and Party Politics, and he is the author of Building Policy Legitimacy in Japan: Political Behavior beyond Rational Choice (Macmillan/St. Martin's Press, 1999).

Jungmin Seo is an assistant professor in the Department of Political Science at the University of Hawaii at Manoa, where he teaches Chinese and Korean politics. His main research interest focuses on the various forms of nationalism in contemporary East Asia.

Zhengxu Wang is finishing his Ph.D. from the University of Michigan's Department of Political Science. His areas of study include comparative democratization, political attitudes and behaviors, and China and Asian politics. He has been publishing in international journals and edited volumes and is currently preparing articles for journals including Foreign Affairs and the Journal of Democracy.

Lynn T. White III teaches in the Politics Department, Woodrow Wilson School, and East Asian Studies Program at Princeton. He edited the present volume while at the Centre of Asian Studies, University of Hong Kong. His books include Careers in Shanghai about the 1950s, Policies of Chaos about the Cultural Revolution, and Unstately Power about the origins of reforms. He has also written articles concerning Hong Kong and cross-Strait relations. His main current book project is about the effects of economic booms on local political structures in China and Southeast Asia.

David Dahua Yang is a doctoral candidate in the Politics Department at Princeton University. His dissertation explores the linkage between modes of political development and socio-economic organization, drawing upon the comparative experiences of Taiwan, Singapore, and South Korea. He has also published various articles on Chinese politics and research methodology. Yang holds an MBA in Economics and worked as a financial software developer before returning to graduate school.

Yongnian Zheng is a Senior Research Fellow at the East Asian Institute (EAI) of the National University of Singapore and co-editor of China: An International Journal. His research focus is on China's domestic political economy and its external relations. His papers have appeared in journals such as Comparative Political Studies, Political Science Quarterly, and Third World Quarterly. His books include Discovering Chinese Nationalism in China (Cambridge University Press, 1999), Globalization and State Transformation (Cambridge University Press, 2004) and Will China Become Democratic? Elite, Class and Regime Transition (2004). He has also co-edited many volumes including Reform, Legitimacy and Dilemmas (2000) and Bringing the Party Back In (2004).
