The East Asian Institute (EAI) is an autonomous research organization, set up in April 1997 under a statute of the National University of Singapore. It is the successor of the former Institute of East Asian Political Economy (IEAPE).

As a centre devoted to the study of developments in East Asia, EAI has a broader set of objectives than its predecessor, but it will continue to focus on contemporary China. Specifically it undertakes research on a wide range of topics, including the regional and global impact of a resurgent People's Republic of China (PRC), its political and social changes as a result of recent dynamic economic growth, the quest for cultural rejuvenation among the Chinese people, cultural and commercial networks of the ethnic Chinese in a global perspective, and developments in Hong Kong and Taiwan. At the same time, it also monitors political, economic and social trends in China and seeks to promote empirical and policy-oriented research based on sound scholarship.
